Space-saving, simple and beautiful:

Convenient installation and simple operation:
 The all-in-one computer is ready to use out of the box, without complicated assembly and cable connection, which reduces the installation time. It is especially suitable for users who are not familiar with computer hardware and is more convenient to use.

Theory

All-in-one computers use a modular design that compactly combines modules such as the display, motherboard, and power supply. The principle is to connect each module through an internal interface (such as PCIe, SATA) to achieve data transmission and power supply. This design not only saves space, but also allows some modules (such as memory, hard disk) to be replaced according to needs, improving flexibility and maintainability.

Technology

The housing of the integrated device is usually manufactured using precision molds. First, a mold prototype is made according to the design drawings, and high-precision processing is performed using CNC machines. The mold material is mostly high-strength alloy to ensure durability and precision. After the mold is completed, the mold is tested and adjusted to ensure that the housing surface is smooth and flawless during injection molding. This process is crucial to the quality of subsequent assembly
